Subject: Dimock Testing

Mr. Sternberg,

I just read the following wire and was wondering when the testing will begin, when the results will be released and how will the EPA release the results?

Any help or info you can give would be much appreciated. Thanks!

AP WIRE:

DIMOCK, Pa. (AP) -- Residents of Pennsylvania's top natural gas-producing town will soon know what may be lurking in their drinking water wells. Federal regulators are investigating claims of contamination in Dimock, where some residents say drilling ruined their water. The Environmental Protection Agency is testing water from scores of homes. Initial results are expected this week. The inquiry reflects EPA's effort to ramp up oversight of the Marcellus Shale, a vast underground rock formation believed to hold the nation's largest gas reservoir.

Thanks again,
Ron
